ABSTRACT

This study is an attempt to demonstrate and illustrate the role of the National Archives of Zambia in contributing to knowledge and national development through promotion of research. It examines the development of the National Archives from 1935 to 2006 by analysing and highlighting its legal framework, preservation strategies and archival resources in the context of their role in facilitating research for knowledge and national development. Theoretically, it underscores the role of the National Archives as a public institution that legally acquires, preserves and provides access to information of archival nature for research.

The history and development of archival activities in Zambia is illustrated in the context of archival legislative framework. The initial archival legislation formulated in the colonial period facilitated the creation of a joint archival institution and services for the Central African territories of Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. Archives legislation formulated during the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland influenced the way archival services were provided in all the three territories. In the Post-Independence period archival legislation was much more detailed because of changing ideas on how archival services were to be provided. The legislation only guided the management of public records, archives and printed publications created within Zambia.

The study further highlights the preservation strategies and measures implemented in the colonial and post-independence periods to prolong the life span of archival resources in the custody of archival institutions for research purposes. Although some preservation practices conducted in the colonial period were carried on in the post-independence period, new advanced preservation approaches were adopted in the light of changes in technology of information production. It is also demonstrated that the preservation of various information resources in the archival institution attracted a wide variety of research interests both in the colonial and post-independence period.

It is further established that the provision of archival services both in the colonial and post-colonial period encountered various challenges. Some of the challenges experienced in the colonial period remained and persisted even in the post-independence period.
DEDICATION.

This dissertation is dedicated to my husband Bellingtone Changwe, my daughters Mapalo and Natasha, my parents the late Ocean and Rosemary Simabwachi; my brothers Jimmy, Joel and Judge Simabwachi; my nephews Alumbwe, Caleb, Harrison, kezo, Kundakwashe, and nieces Kizzy and Zahara.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study owes to the support and inspiration of individuals and institutions. First and foremost, I would like to thank my former immediate supervisors at Munali Girls High School for allowing me to be attending classes for my studies while at the same time teaching. For this I particularly owe a great deal to the former headmistress Pumula Sumbwa and deputy head Makumba Kaite respectively. I would also like to thank the National In-Service Teachers College management for financial assistance to conduct my research.

I would like to convey my special gratitude to Prof. Bizeck. J. Phiri the supervisor of this dissertation for his advice, guidance, encouragement and support. From him I learnt that hard work is an important virtue in academic life. I extend my special appreciation to staff of the Department of History for their advice and the academic support for my studies.

I express my indebtedness to the staff of the University of Zambia library, the National Archives of Zambia library and the National Assembly library for their great assistance when I was conducting research at their institutions. I would like in particular to extend my gratitude to Chileshe-Lusale Musuma, the Director of National Archives of Zambia who was readily available to give me the information I needed most.

I would also like to thank Dr Marja Hineflaar, an independent scholar for her guidance and information. Finally I wish to acknowledge particular gratitude to my family and classmates for their moral and spiritual support and encouragement.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Declaration..................................................................................................................................................

Copyright..................................................................................................................................................

Approval..................................................................................................................................................

Abstract................................................................................................................................................... iv

Dedication.................................................................................................................................................. v

Acknowledgements.................................................................................................................................... vi

Table of Contents.................................................................................................................................... viii

CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION AND HISTORICAL BACKGROUND................................................................. 1

Statement of the problem......................................................................................................................... 2

Objectives of the study............................................................................................................................. 3

Rationale of the study.............................................................................................................................. 3

Literature Review.................................................................................................................................. 3

Conceptual framework............................................................................................................................ 8

Organisation of the study......................................................................................................................... 9

Research methodology........................................................................................................................... 9

CHAPTER TWO

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF ZAMBIA: LEGISLATION AND DEVELOPMENT

DURING THE COLONIAL PERIOD, 1935-1964 ........................................................................... 14

Introduction............................................................................................................................................. 14

Development of Archival Legislation................................................................................................... 15

Legislation and Formation of the Central African Archives, 1946-1953............................................. 18

Archival Legislation during the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, 1953-1963................. 21
The Printed Publication Legislation, 1938-1964 ......................................................... 24
Conclusion .................................................................................................................. 26

CHAPTER THREE

MANAGEMENT OF PUBLIC RECORDS, ARCHIVES AND PRINTED PUBLICATIONS IN POST-INDEPENDENCE ZAMBIA: THE LEGAL FRAMEWORK, 1964-2006 ................................................................................................. 31

Introduction ................................................................................................................ 31
National Archives of Zambia in the Initial Years of Independence, 1964-1968 ............. 32
Management of Records and Archives, 1969-1990 ..................................................... 35
Developments in Records and Archival Management, 1991-2006 ................................. 40
Management of Printed Publications, 1964-2006 ..................................................... 44
Conclusion .................................................................................................................. 49

CHAPTER FOUR

PRESERVATION OF ARCHIVAL RESOURCES, 1935-2006 .......................................... 56

Introduction ................................................................................................................ 56
Generation of archival materials in the Colonial Period .............................................. 57
Archival Preservation in the Colonial Period, 1935-1964 ............................................ 59
Archival Preservation in the Post-Independence Period, 1964-2006 ............................ 64
Conclusion .................................................................................................................. 69

CHAPTER FIVE

RESEARCH AND CHALLENGES OF ARCHIVES IN THE COLONIAL AND POST-INDEPENDENCE PERIOD, 1935-2006 .................................................................................................................. 76

Introduction ................................................................................................................ 76
Research Activities in the Colonial Period, 1935-1964 ................................................. 77
Challenges of the Archival Institution in the Colonial Period 1935-1964 ..................... 85
Promotion of Research Activities in the Post-Independence Period, 1964-2006 ............. 88